

THE VIEW

by Mark Keathley

Feb 2016

We love to get up high where we can see the world. When we see far off into the distance, we wonder and dream, “What’s it like from over there?” “What world awaits if I get to that place?” “The View” was just one of those dreamy spots where visions were cast, plans were made, dreams were spoken, and determination to see it through was intended. From a cabin overlooking the valley, I painted this little painting of the spectacular Smoky Mountains and then added a couple of little bears to demonstrate what we all want to do – rise up higher so we can see “The View” and dream.
