

DIALOGUE WITH THE STARS

by Jess Wathen

Nov 2017

This painting was inspired by the lyrics of “Dialogue with the Stars” by Vintersorg. My efforts to explain would seem paltry compared to the elegance of the lyrics so I will let them speak for me.

Ardent starshine upon my face, the monumental night sky reveal its torches. Unaltered for aeons, yet zestful they're flaming like ornamental diamonds. In my telescopes focus, a striding light conjure me fixedly. Oh, what a colourful drama, what a theatrical performance. These myriads of stars enchants me with their oddity. At cosmos entrance hall, where time and space units in a charade. Under crimson flares I watch the tempest of the universe. In dark artistry, I lionize the splendid glare. An unearthly voice of euphony express itself in an ancient tongue. Its elocution is based on silence, so it pulsates through the five senses. It's like a poem of wisdom and wizardry navigating through the world. A legacy from nebulas, an endless mystic conversation. These myriads of stars enchants me with their oddity. At cosmos entrance hall, where time and space units in a charade. Under crimson flares I watch the tempest of the universe. In dark artistry, I lionize the splendid glare. Now clouds gather at a distant skyline to cover the firmament. Rays are fading in a metamorphosis of the blazing weave above. These myriads of stars enchants me with their oddity. At cosmos entrance hall, where time and space units in a charade. Under crimson flares I watch the tempest of the universe. In dark artistry, I lionize the splendid glare. 26 years have past since it first called my name. And when I'm dead, this piece of jewelry will still remain. -Vintersorg
